INADMIS-IBLE CARESSES.

Young Lady's loquiry on the Subject—Somb Good Advice to Young Ladies. Emily S. Boulon is Toledo Blade. Should a young lady allow a gentleman, whom he is quite well acquisited with, to piece his arm around her waits while walking home from party—it being quite dark? DEWDROP, Jun the clause, "It being quite dark." So your query resolves itself into this: Should your receive a careas from one who is not confessedly your lover or husband, if it be given in the dark when no one can find it out? Most emphatically, you should not! An olb proverb, I believe it comes from the French, reads, in plain English, something in this way: When you are in doubt, don't. That is, when you are in doubt, don't. That is, when you are in sure as to the right or wrong of a contemplated action, or as to its propriety or impropriety in a moral point of view, it is better not to do the questionable thing, even though you may afterwards become assured that it was not improper, than to take a step which may bring you intense regret, and perhaps sorrow. And to nothing does this apply with more force than to your social intercourse with the opposite sex.

Of sowres, you would not allow such as the colored in the such as the propriate of China, Of sowres, you would not allow such as the color of the negroes were very deeply enraged.

Tea, taken hot, is certainly more wholesome than iced tea. This well shown by the conormous population of China, ite sex.
Of course, you would not allow such a site sex.

Of course, you would not allow such a familiarity to one toward whom you were not pleasantly inclined. You may not be "in love" in the common acceptation of the term, but your feeling is somewhat beyond indifference, and may very easily grow into something stronger. And there is where the danger comes in. Yes, danger; for no matter how good and pure you may be, nor how confidant in your own strength to resist all templation, this caress, this magnetic touch of one who is personally agreeable to you, will tend to arouse emotions in your heart that should slumber until the real prince comes whose right, through his acknowledged and broved love for you, to ask for such privileges is undoubted, and to whom it will be your glory to yield them. Until then, until yon are certain it is he, guard yourself from such a familiarity, refuse to receive such a carees from any man, no matter how well you may be acquainted with him. If he seeks your love homorably, it will be time enough for you when you have accepted it to allow him to put his arm around you. If it is only a mere pastime, such as young men frequently indulge in, then you certainly do not want to such a familiarity, refuse to receive such a carees from any man, no matter how well you may be acquainted with him. If he seeks your love homorably, it will be time enough for you when you have accepted it to allow him to put his arm around you. If it is only a mere pastime, such as young men frequently indulge in, then you certainly do not want. astime, such as young men frequently pastine, such as young men irrequently indulge in, then you certainly do not want to grant him a privilege like that. He may mean you no chadow of harm, but personal familiarity, founded upon no relation that makes it sacred, is always unsafe. Many a young gril would have saved herself a life-time agony had she steadfastly repelled these advances, however innocent at first their meaning.

There is nothing, my young friend, that you should guard so excupulous as your own womanly delicacy. Brush the bloom off from a peach, rudely touch the waxen petals of a filly and hair their beauty is gone. It is impossible for you, or any other woman, to allow yourself to be caressed by your young men acquainances, without losing somewhat of that purity and modesty that you should wear always as a queen her robes of royality. You will be sure then to preserve, not only their respect, but what is of far more importance, that of self.

Nor need this preservation of personal their respect, but what is of far more importance, that of gelf.

Nor need this preservation of personal dignity savor one whit of prudery. You can be just as bright, as merry, and friendly while saying by your manner abould it be necessary, "hands of," as you can possibly he hy permitting these sontimental demonstrations. They are not necessary to the good comradeship which is all that should exist or appear to exist between you and any masculling lives are that you possess. which is all that should exist or appear to exist between you and any masculine friend until you are sure that you possess the true and tender love of the one man who has made himself your heart's king, a love which holds you sacred, as any true man holds the woman he would make his wife and the mother of his children. And believe me, even if you are not certain. while the tree not if you are not certain believe me, even if you are not certain that this prince loves you as you desire to be loved by him, he will not be any essier be loved by him, he will not be any easier won should you yield to careases prompted by a passing mood, but rather repelled from you, for it is human nature not to value what is easily or cheanly obtained. The freedom which girls in this country are allowed, compared to the strict upervision exercised over them upon the other side of the water—aspervision that would make such a uperior a your would make such a question as yours needless—has been the subject of much

Should a young lady allow a gentleman, whom she is quite well acquisited with, to pice his are acound ber wait while walking home from a party—it being quite dark!

My young friend, your question contains its own answer in its final words.

There is in your mind a serious doubt about the propriety of allowing such a privilege to one who has no claim upon you other than that of an acquaintace, albeit he is one you know well, expressed in the clause, "it being quite dark." So your query resolves itself into this. Should your receive a carees from one who is not confessedly your lover or husband, if it be given in the dark when no one can find it out? would make such a question as yours needless—has been the subject of much and gravo discussion as to which method makes the nobler and truer woman. To my mind there is no question but that our own is much better. Of course, I do not mean that parceis should allow their daughtors to run wild, but by teaching them a self-respect that renders them able to take care of yourself, they will develop into woman, intelligent, responsible, capable and standing alone, women who are not dells nor weak incapables, ready to succumb to the first temptation. And this self-resiliance is the more necessary with each succeeding year, for the number of girls and women who either must or who desire to go out into the world to work side by side with men multiply.
